

HENRY DARROW: LIGHTNING IN THE BOTTLE

Henry Darrow (born Enrique Tomas Delgado) catapulted to international stardom in 1967 as sexy, complex Manolito Montoya in the western The High Chaparral. He was the first actor of Puerto Rican heritage to star in a television series. Henry survived and had a career when if you were Latino, you couldnt be just good, you had to be beyond great and thats Henry, says noted writer/entertainer Rick Najera. At the height of his fame Darrow put his career on the line to open doors for other Hispanics. He has continued to break ground for over fifty years as a working actor and was recently featured on the PBS series Pioneers of Television. Lightning in the Bottle is the must-read portrait of the inspirational, fiercely determined, endearing and enduring Emmy-winning performer. Sometimes I give myself over to a part heart and soul. At other times, its just technique. Theres nothing in particular to say about it except its work. But I love to work!- HENRY DARROW

KIRKUS REVIEWS... Darrow and Pippins skillfully intersperse the historical context with thoughtful analyses and often-lighthearted vignettes regarding various gigs and circumstances...the subject of ethnic identity is treated with focused consideration...An entertaining, well-organized account...WESTERN CLIPPINGS

Linda Cristal once said, When Henry Darrow came onto the set, it was like the sun came up. You too will get that feeling reading of Henrys life.
